Mann is a faculty member of the International Business School at Brandeis. Previously, she had worked in policy institutions and think tanks in Washington D.C., including the Institute for International Economics, the Federal Reserve Board of Governors, the President's Council of Economic Advisors at the White House, and the World Bank. Her current research focuses on two related topics: information technology and services trade in global markets, and the U.S. trade deficit and the dollar.

On the economic and policy implications of globalization of information technology and services, she authored Accelerating the Globalization of America: The Role for Information Technology (2006) and Global Electronic Commerce: A Policy Primer (2000); as well as numerous articles, including Assessing the Potential Benefit of Trade Facilitation: A Global Perspective, World Economy (2005) and The U.S. Current Account, New Economy Services, and Implications for Sustainability, Review of International Economics (2004).
